Ruscombe Recipe Booklet

Healthy Foods at our Open House

Download the Ruscombe Recipe Booklet for FREE online at www.Ruscombe.org

This booklet represents the recipe contributions of several holistic practitioners at the Ruscombe Mansion Community Health Center in Baltimore, Maryland, some of which were prepared for our Open House in 2011. More information about the services and classes offered at Ruscombe can be found at www.Ruscombe.org.

It seems the key to eating well is to eat as close to the source as possible. The fewer processed foods in your diet, the better. Add more fresh fruits and vegetables as lightly cooked as possible. Eat a lot of raw fruit salads and green salads.

If you can take your diet a few steps further, you should seek out organic produce whenever possible, to minimize your exposure to chemical pesticides and fertilizers. More people today are also recognizing the health and environmental benefits of eating a local diet, or at least seeking out local food from farmer's markets, roadside stands, and a growing number of grocery stores.

Requiring more diligence, another dietary choice many are making when they eat meat is to seek out pasture-finished beef and chicken, looking to ensure that the animals are raised in natural environments and processed humanely.

For more ideas on how to improve your diet to maximize its healing potential in your life, consult your Ruscombe practitioner. They can always refer you to one of our practitioners with more nutritional training.

During the school year, Ruscombe is home to the Co-op Café hosted by Bonny Eisenbise, who brings her decades of experience creating healing vegetarian entrees to entice any palate. Call 410-367-7300 to inquire about hours and menus of the day.

Protein Myths

by Peter Hinderberger, M.D., Ph.D., DIHom.

Many people are concerned about not getting enough protein in their diet. Many people believe that a high protein diet helps them lose weight. Many people believe it is necessary to supplement their diet with protein powder to get the essential amino acids. These are all myths!

High protein diets can cause kidney stones and in severe cases, kidney failure, gout, ketosis (too much acidity), heart disease, and cancer. More common problems associated with a high protein diet are constipation, osteoporosis, hypersensitivities, allergies to environmental pollutants, chemical sprays and certain food items.

Protein Facts

The human body requires 22 amino acids, of which eight are essential for adults, meaning that they must be added from outside sources. In addition, two amino acids called arginine and histadine are also considered essential for infants and small children because of their underdeveloped digestive systems...
